

LALITA KRISHNA
Producer • Director • Writer

BIOGRAPHY

Lalita Krishna is a multiple award winning filmmaker whose work has been broadcast in Canada on all major networks, and featured at film festivals around the world.

Lalita worked for several years in educational production with TVOntario. She combines her background in education with her strong skills in communication to create powerful non-fiction productions that are able to captivate and hold audiences.

Lalita's documentaries on kids who change the world have had successful sales in the Canadian and international educational market. Responding to the shift in audience from Television to Interactive Media, Lalita founded Breakout Media in 2008, an Interactive production company which produced the successful award winning series 'Breakout!', with the CBC.

As co Chair of the Documentary Organization of Canada's Toronto chapter, Lalita also heads Doc Shift a two-year initiative funded by the OMDC which has an ambitious goal to develop the core capacity of producers to create cutting edge transmedia documentaries that can be marketed internationally.

Lalita is on the Board of Hot Docs- North America's leading documentary film festival. Lalita has participated and moderated trade and business and educational panels. She presents workshops and is a featured speaker at prestigious professional development events.

Lalita has also taught in the Journalism Programs at Ryerson University, at George Brown College and at the Summer Institute of Mount Saint Vincent University.

Lalita has been awarded the DreamCatcher Award for using her craft to better humanity and the Trailblazer 2010 award from the Reelworld film festival. Her films have won multiple awards and continue to be screened at various international film festivals.

Lalita's current projects include a trans media documentary on Chocolate and a feature documentary on the growth of organized Retail in India.
